

HIGH-END BATHROOM DECOR

Vessel Sinks: From Rocks To Luxury Designs

From prehistoric times, vessel sinks have suffered an upgrade on their functionality and design in such a good way that nowadays they represent a "wow" factor in a bathroom and can improve the aesthetic value of entire rooms. As a luxury and handcrafted brand, which knows the perks of vessel sinks to timeless and elegant decors, Maison Valentina offers a range variety that differs in shape, size, and material but has a standard when it comes to their high-end techniques.

In their beginning, vessel sinks were made with the material available at the time, usually a rock, with its naturally eroded look made by weather which created a bowl shape. They were commonly placed on top of a surface to more conveniently access but now is simply a design choice if whether lay it above the counter or recessed. Besides this versatility that allows the imagination to flow between endless design possibilities, these pieces of art are customizable and offer more space to the countertop.

Honoring the Douro Valley landscape in Portugal, Maison Valentina created the Duorum Vessel Sink, an asymmetrical design available in three different types of marble: Nero Marquina, Carrara, and Estremoz, which allows this item to fit in any interior, enhancing the luxurious look of marble.

This marble vessel sink that belongs to the Koi Collection by Maison Valentina, was inspired by the Japanese Koi carp, but it is more than just a sophisticated handmade item. If there is a value that this brand stands for is the functional luxury: every design must combine beauty, style, high-end, and comfort. Vessel sinks are considered more ergonomic than common sinks because they rise from two to six inches above the countertop, increasing the comfort level for users of several heights.
